

BORN INTO THE CULT

by anonymous

My conscious interaction with those who were and are in the cult began at 4/5 years old. On questioning those around me about “I promise to pay the bearer...” written on these pieces of paper which everyone, in one way or another, treated with reverence and sanctity that no other bits of paper were. My enquiries were discarded; I was told about ‘the modern money systems’ of today.

Twenty odd years passed before pondering on these issues deeply again. Within that period, whomever I interacted with on this subject had never really thought about it beforehand... and its illogicity didn't stimulate interest subsequently. That no one questioned this insanity shows how intense belief is amongst cultists. After university, I started work at a ‘hedge fund’ and was introduced to an ‘Austrian School’ economics group led by a fellow mathematician with whom I found common sense. I began lecturing with them worldwide on currency, its evolution and potential currency reform. But even still, amongst our little group, there was a tendency to hold that ‘the involvement’ of ‘the modern money system’ was necessary for whatever ‘solution’ might be considered. Their thoughts were often clouded by conspiracies; they pontificated about ‘the modern money system’s evils’ – its supposed ‘perpetrators’ – without looking at their own involvement, implicit support and promotion of it.

This intensity of cult belief has not retracted but grown over the years. Cultists try to expand their reach in various ways. Attention is diverted away from falsity of ‘modern currency’ by obfuscation. STOCKS... BONDS... PROPERTY... which are considered ‘barometers’ of ‘the economic climate’ all ‘quoted’ in ‘modern currency’ are discussed at length, whilst ridiculousness of what these abstractions are ‘quoted’ in is overlooked.

VARIOUS VOICES from THE CULT

Apologist; 'university lecturer'

"We cannot deny that king Henry VIII was a remarkable man who changed the destiny of our country. Troubled by consistent marital infidelity, Henry sought to overcome these challenges in many novel ways..."

Promoter

"This is Plank... he rushed back from his coal mining shift, battling through protestors trying to eliminate his livelihood, just to be at his son's football match... real father... real hero. Plank - we salute you..."

Millennial/gen-z

Tech start-up APPZ!, founded by New-York-based entrepreneurs Jeremiah and Josh, helps car drivers locate their steering wheels. In the latest round of venture capital funding, APPZ! was valued at $1.8bn. "If your car company goes bankrupt, you don't expect your car to vanish, but if it does, our app can..."

Case studies

Whilst some characters within the cult are blatant, such as estate agents and insurance underwriters, some are more covert; more oblivious. Nevertheless, they're all taking their 'cut' from 'the modern money system'...

1: "Hannah" – a television executive's daughter

Everything is as simple as Hannah (Spanish lit., Cambridge) thinks it is. You might think that there's introspection, contemplation and in-depth study involved in it but Hannah can summarize, understand and propose improvements within minutes of having heard it. Whatever it is. Hannah's partner is Ahmed, a clinical psychologist. Ahmed spends most of his time trying to 'push pills' on to perfectly fine individuals, were it not for his 'psychological assessments' of them.

How does Hannah 'earn her income?' Being 'the beneficiary of a trust fund,' Hannah only occasionally 'writes' for the Daily Mail and Guardian under headlines such as "is GDP growth directly related to mental well-being?" or "poorer countries consistently outperform richer countries on a happiness index..." giving a veneer of thorough insight to garbled-blah discussed with Ahmed in bed sometime last week.

Comment: if Hannah were to be informed that she's in a cult, she'd deny it, on top of understanding everything about it...

2: "Neil" – a spreadsheet functionary

Neil: the 'spreadsheet functionary.' Neil works on 'the grand spreadsheet' – be that for 'Royal Danish Oil A/S'... 'Ballistic Missiles plc.'... 'German Tyres AG'... whichever spreadsheet part happens to be paying the most.

Neil does not know much about the mechanical intricacies and problems of extracting oil, making missiles, or car tyres – having 'qualified in sports studies.' For Neil engages his brain only to the extent that it involves watching football/cricket/rugby or drinking beer – and that suits Neil's 'employers.' Spreadsheet 'malfunction' could lead to Neil losing his job and so his 'income' – not to mention what 'his wife' and 'fellow churchgoers' would think. Neil likes the 'BBC Victorian dramas' of late; can't see past embellishment of truth for "all the inclusion" – which "is a good thing," up to a limit, for Neil.

Neil is very committed to 'Korean times-tables techniques' for the kids – which he heard about from Jens at church. Sadly, Neil cannot see that '6X2' ('six of two') isn't the same as '2X6' ('two of six') – as he barks at the kids to get on with their Korean times-tables techniques.

Comment: it would take a while for Neil to understand his situation; even then he wouldn't care. Neil was born mainly for beer; and beer mainly for Neil. 'Consciously spiritual' for Neil means clapping his hands at church... after which his pastor pontificates about 'others' with their 'evil.'

3: “Paul” – a politician populist or elected statesman

Red/blue/white/whatever: in the morning, to assembled carers and medical professionals, Paul says “my mum was a nurse, she instilled in me an abiding love of our health service within me...” just to say to assembled insurance underwriters in the evening that “profit and enterprise are not dirty words to me, they’re what keeps us driven...”

He has ‘his office funded’ from many different ‘entities’ – eg Cost Cut plc. – which aims to replace conscious human interaction by computers (and a service contract!) Paul gets Cost Cut’s message across by spouting dross such as “we have to tackle the reluctance of workforces to modernization...”

Paul has a cousin Jerome, a ‘cryptocurrency start-up funder,’ who says things like “we cannot let shady, unelected, unaccountable non-governmental organizations to manipulate the political landscape of the entire world...” in casual conversation – and with intent – just to make sure Jerome’s ‘interests’ have ways to fruition. And if they don’t with red/white/blue Paul, they will with white/blue/red Tim (Paul’s ‘golf club friend.’)

Comment: Paul ‘studied law’ at university – but sees no culpability in murder for missile-makers in ‘his constituency’ – in fact he encourages them as it’s “good for the country’s economy...”

4: “Deepika” – a well-meaning ‘investigative journalist’

“In Virginia Water, you cannot see the boundaries but you must know where they are – your life could depend on it. Competing gangs carve up the town centre for their own nefarious ends...”

Comment: Deepika ‘sees the evil’ 5,000 miles away from her New York apartment but not in her own backyard: she lives above an estate agent and below a securities broker whom she considers as friends.

“Those who live in Virginia Water carry a mental map, dividing this teeming town into green, yellow and red zones. Cholera has made a comeback but armed gangs remain the greatest plague. Morning rush hour is a peak kidnapping time, many are snatched from the streets on their way to work...”

Comment: Deepika’s great-grandfather ‘owned a shirt factory’ in Gujarat from which he became ‘immensely wealthy.’ Fast forward a few decades and this is what allowed Deepika ‘to acquire’ that New York apartment for $5m.

How did this cult start? The further back we go, the clearer all becomes. At its initiation, we find various 'churches,' 'kings' and warlords with absurd concepts of 'social exclusivity' wrapping them all together such as 'the divine right of kings.' The king's 'debts,' backed by his 'fiat of taxation' (unbounded violence militaristic) and an air of divinity, would be used as 'currency' – a 'monetization' of 'the king's word.' Stop and think about that for a moment...

These 'debts;' these fictions had to be exchangeable for any assemblance of true currency available, lest the charade cave in on itself. Such a psychopathy led to 'kings' and other 'landlords' thinking of those on 'their land' as their 'property' to do with as they wished: feudalism. However, such a state did not encourage rebellion amongst 'serfs,' at least initially, but led to a justification of their position as a result of some aforementioned 'divinely ordained' procedure.

'Nation statism' with 'kings' and 'debts' finds its parallels with 'presidents' and their 'electorate.' Plus ça change. Just who (and how) precisely is this fiction of 'government debt' owed by ordinary citizens within any 'nation state?' Who cares?! Let cult voices speak... and cult journalists do!

Bearing that in mind, what would 'a typical charge sheet' look like for one of our eight billion (plus) cultists?

- Wire fraud.
- Securities fraud.
- Conspiracy.
- Scheming to defraud fellow citizens by misappropriating their understanding of currency, as would spontaneously have developed and promoting a cult in its stead.
- Willingly did combine, conspire and agree together with each other to commit wire fraud.

What this cult comes down to is lying and stealing in basic terms: so far has society descended that we have a quagmire of frauds so enveloped in the cult that there seems no hope for humanity.

But there is!
